Calem, 1998 Analyzing data from the 1989 Survey of Consumer Finances we find credit card borrowing is inversely correlated with a household's willingness to comparison shop for loans and deposits Households with larger balances have higher disutility of search ceteris paribus In addition these households are more likely to be rejected or to be granted a lower than desired credit limit when applying for new credit and so may find it difficult to switch from one card issuer to another This partly explains the stickiness of card interest rates and why issuers enjoy above average returns despite the industry's competitive structure Credit Cards and You Financial Consumer Agency of Canada, 2003 Do Liquidity Constraints and Interest Rates Matter for Consumer Behavior? Evidence from Credit Card Data David B. Gross, 2011 This paper utilizes a unique new dataset of credit card accounts to analyze how people respond to changes in credit supply The data consist of a panel of thousands of individual credit card accounts from several different card issuers with associated credit bureau data We estimate both marginal propensities to consume MPCs out of liquidity and interest rate elasticities We also evaluate the ability of different models of consumption to rationalize our results distinguishing the Permanent Income Hypothesis PIH liquidity constraints precautionary saving and behavioral models We find that increases in credit limits generate an immediate and significant rise in debt counter to the PIH The average quot MPC out of liquidityquot dDebt dLimit ranges between 10% 14% The MPC is much larger for people starting near their limits consistent with binding liquidity constraints However the MPC is significant even for people starting well below their limit We show this response is consistent with buffer stock models of precautionary saving Nonetheless there are other results that conventional models cannot easily explain for example why so many people are borrowing on their credit cards and simultaneously holding low yielding assets Unlike most other studies we also find strong effects from changes in account specific interest rates The long run elasticity of debt to the interest rate is approximately 1.3. Less than half of this elasticity represents balance shifting across cards with most reflecting net changes in total borrowing. The elasticity is larger for decreases in interest rates than for increases which can explain the widespread use of temporary promotional rates. The elasticity is smaller for people starting near their credit limits again consistent with liquidity constraints.
