

REFLECTION PAPER

I realized that teaching Araling Panlipunan is a tough challenge for teachers but the same with other subjects, it also guarantees a very rewarding feeling once students are able to learn and apply these learnings in their lives. Upon learning the guiding principles in the teaching of Araling Panlipunan, I realized that teachers should not only rely on books and teach facts and theories. Rather, they should integrate the lessons in the students' daily experiences in order to raise civil awareness and develop skills necessary for life. This is the very aim of teaching Araling Panlipunan. More than teaching important events, personalities, dates, and periods in history, the subject itself is teaching about life. This where integration comes in. Integration for me is the most relevant guiding principle in which teachers should anchor their teaching strategies. Integration, as a guiding principle, prefers questioning and problem solving to direct the process of acquiring knowledge and skills. It reflects the interdependent real world and involves the learner's body, feelings, senses, and intuition in learning experience. It also bases its practices on the characteristics of the human learner and on the interdependent nature of reality. Furthermore, it provides holistic context for learning which leads students to acquire a greater ability to make a number of connections and to solve problems in a creative way. When teaching become integrative, other guiding principles such as being Meaningful, Value – based, Challenging and Active are also achieved.

I believe that in teaching Araling Panlipunan, the best method to be utilized is relating the lesson to the child's life. Nobody can learn for them in the same way as nobody can eat for them, live for them, or die for them. Everybody has a way of learning. Now using this as a strategy, students become more motivated to learn since they will be able to see connections of the lesson to their lives. It will be easier for them to acquire learning once they feel personally connected to what they're being taught and they are provided with opportunities to apply the material in real life. Araling Panlipuna is a subject commonly taken for granted by students. However, if teachers are able to teach this in an effective way, applying the guiding principles and relating the lessons to students' real-life experiences, this subject will become very engaging, interesting and meaningful for the students. It only takes the right motivation and the proper strategies in order to make learning social studies fun, interactive and significant for both the teacher and the students.

From now on, I am determined to master and apply these guiding principles in order to make teaching (not only about Social Studies) a very rewarding job. Seeing students putting their learnings into action is a very fulfilling experience for a teacher. I am determined to be a major contributor of their motivation and love towards learning. I will see to it that they will not only learn within the four walls of the classroom and be familiar with the terms and information written on the books, but they will also be allowed to develop their skills which are necessary for survival in the real-world. I am determined to design activities that will help them see the connection of the lessons we have to the lives that they live. Through this, they will be able to nurture love for learning and enjoy making connections in the real world.
