The concept map illustrates two primary mechanisms of hormone action:

- Water-soluble, amino acid-based hormones: These hormones typically remain outside the cell and directly activate plasma membrane receptors. When triggered by hormones, these receptors use GTP to directly activate G proteins. G proteins then activate phospholipases, which generate cAMP molecules. cAMP molecules directly activate protein kinases.
- Steroid hormones: These hormones enter the cell and bind to intracellular receptors. The hormone-receptor complex directly activates transcription factors, which then activate genes. This pathway also involves the activation of protein kinases, which in turn activate phospholipases, leading to the generation of cAMP molecules and the activation of protein kinases.
