

Barriers to Trade

The harmonization of national export and import regulations, free trade is a system wherein all the goods and quantities are free to flow across international frontiers for the benefit of their own economies. Once the free trade system is in place, there are more efficient ways to trade that there are self-sufficient nations doing their own. Examples of these include the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), the World Trade Organization (WTO), the European Union (EU), and the free trade area between China and 14 ASEAN states.

However, there are some nations that are not willing to accept trade that would benefit people in particular regions. Nations in Europe that protect their people from the competition for jobs are an example of this. These nations are unwilling to accept the fact that their people are willing and able to produce at a lower price. If there were no international trade, nations like in Figure 5.1 that produce at a lower price than their counterparts would be protected from the competition.

International Trade

It shows a free international trade. The total supply is represented by the domestic supply and the foreign supply. The domestic supply is at P_1 and quantity Q_1 . They are able to produce more at a lower price. Also at P_1 , domestic demand is Q_2 and foreign supply is Q_3 . Thus, domestic demand is greater than domestic supply. The foreign supply is greater than domestic supply.
