

Land Rover Service Diagnostics Recommended Procedure for Resolving Module Programming / Configuration Failures:

If module programming fails on any vehicle/system, technicians should:

1. At the moment any IDS module programming error occurs, always write down or print any error messages including any specific reply/error codes displayed.
2. Review and evaluate the points outlined in the "best practices" section above. Perform a brief check of those items including the condition of the vehicle diagnostic socket.
3. Ensure all the "best practices" above have been checked and passed, or were corrected.
4. Perform the "Vehicle Reset" function on IDS found under "Special Applications".
5. If working on an LR2, refer to the special section for LR2 before proceeding with additional work in this general recovery process.
6. Attempt the same exact procedure that failed a second time.
7. If the second attempt fails, record or print any error messages including any specific reply/error codes displayed. Discuss this vehicle and the errors reported by IDS with the appointed technical specialist in your service department to determine how this problem might be resolved.
8. Unless a proven method of resolution to this situation is known to the technical specialist, or a functional problem with the vehicle or IDS equipment has been clearly identified and corrected, he/she is encouraged to contact the Land Rover technical helpline before attempting to perform additional programming work with IDS on this vehicle.
9. When contacting helpline for IDS module programming assistance, the technical specialist should be prepared to provide exact details of any on-screen errors, control module hardware/software details and/or e-mail IDS session files to the helpline if they determine this is needed to expedite the resolution to this problem.

NOTE: In some circumstances, the following additional actions may be required to expedite a resolution to a module programming error, or failure.

- Reboot the IDS toughbook. Rebooting the toughbook helps ensure that any temporary windows system or IDS application errors that may occurred in the background, can be reset to help improve stability of operation during the recovery attempt.
- Begin a NEW diagnostic session for this vehicle. This step is important because if any incorrect data was provided to the IDS application as the result of an incorrectly answered pop-up question, some of this information is retained in memory until a new session is started. During the new session, IDS will offer any required pop-up questions again so these inputs can be more carefully selected and input. It IS NOT necessary to delete any previous diagnostic sessions from IDS, but it MIGHT BE important to start a new diagnostic session to begin a recovery procedure.
