Clippinger,Tala Henry,Carole Hirn,Todd Stedeford,Andreas Stucki,Claire Terry,2022-12-16 Building Scientific Capacity for Development Great Britain: Parliament: House of Commons: Science and Technology Committee,2012-10-26 The UK has benefitted from having strong scientific advice available to Ministers and developing nations would see a huge benefit from being able to draw on strong home grown institutions to inform policy decisions A previous report by the Science and Technology Committee had criticised the Government for not paying enough attention to building the science base of developing nations While concerns remain MPs considered that the Department for International Development had made improvements in using a more robust evidence base and developing its own in house expertise An important feature raised in this report is that there had to be more attention paid to ensuring that scientists especially those trained through UK support were facilitated in staying in their home country and utilising the skills they had acquired More support was needed to permit scientists from developing nations to build and develop their early career within in their native country Only then could programmes to build scientific capacity eventually become self sustaining UK science benefits from collaborations in developing nations and through building connections with growing economies of the world but the MPs found that current funding streams actively discourage the participation of UK scientists The MPs recommended that exercises such as the Research Excellence Framework recognise the contribution made by these scientists beyond their publication record

The Oxford Handbook of Africa and Economics Célestin Monga, Justin Yifu Lin, 2015-07-02 A popular myth about the travails of Africa holds that the continent's long history of poor economic performance reflects the inability of its leaders and policymakers to fulfill the long list of preconditions to be met before sustained growth can be achieved These conditions are said to vary from the necessary quantity and quality of physical and human capital to the appropriate institutions and business environments While intellectually charming and often elegantly formulated that conventional wisdom is actually contradicted by historical evidence and common sense It also suggests a form of intellectual mimicry that posits a unique path to prosperity for all countries regardless of their level of development and economic structure In fact the argument underlining that reasoning is tautological and the policy prescriptions derived from it are fatally teleological low income countries are by definition those where such ingredients are missing None of today's high income countries started its growth process with the required and complete list of growth ingredients Unless one truly believes that the continent of Africa and most developing countries are ruled predominantly if not exclusively by plutocrats with a high propensity for sadomasochism the conventional view must be re examined debated and questioned This volume the second of the Oxford Handbook of Africa and Economics reassesses the economic policies and practices observed across the continent since independence It offers a collection of analyses by some of the leading economists and development thinkers of our time and reflects a wide range of perspectives and viewpoints Africa's emergence as a potential economic powerhouse in the years and decades ahead amply justifies the scope and ambition of the book
