Study Guide for Exam 1

Developmental Psychology: the discipline that studies the physical, cognitive, social, and emotional developmental changes.

Developmental stages:

1. Developmental periods: broadest of life course, identifying major physical and psychological systems and structures in selected emerging functional domains (biological and cognitive) and social settings (family, peer, and culture).
2. Child stages: 1st period of growth and development, characterized by rapid physical growth, maturation of some systems involved in psychological and biological functions, and the environment being centered around specific events within psychological and biological systems of processes (identifying physical, social, cognitive, and biological systems).
3. Adolescence: 2nd period of life course, beginning with physical and psychological systems and structures in selected functional domains (biological and cognitive) and social settings (family, peer, and culture).
4. Young adults: 3rd period of life course, beginning with physical and psychological systems and structures in selected functional domains (biological and cognitive) and social settings (family, peer, and culture).
5. Older adults: 4th period of life course, beginning with physical and psychological systems and structures in selected functional domains (biological and cognitive) and social settings (family, peer, and culture).

Developmental research:

1. Longitudinal research: study of individual development over time (or across time) within a population, cross-sectional research: comparing different developmental stages of time across the period of life. The research methodology will analyze the range of developmental stages.
2. Experimental research design: In a controlled environment, researchers use experimental design to study the effects of specific events and structures on development, observational research design: a study of development without intervention, where researchers observe the effects of specific events and structures on development, correlational research design: a study of development without intervention, where researchers observe the effects of specific events and structures on development.
3. Qualitative research design: a study of development without intervention, where researchers observe the effects of specific events and structures on development, quantitative research design: a study of development without intervention, where researchers observe the effects of specific events and structures on development.
