Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, supervised, low-impact aerobically and resistance training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised exercise group or a control group. The exercise group performed a 12-week, supervised, low-impact aerobically and resistance training program. The control group did not exercise. The primary outcome was the change in physical fitness, measured by the 6-minute walk test, and the secondary outcome was the change in health-related quality of life, measured by the SF-36. The results showed that the exercise group had a significant improvement in physical fitness and health-related quality of life compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a supervised, low-impact aerobically and resistance training program can improve physical fitness and health-related quality of life in sedentary, middle-aged women.

Abstract. Staphylococcus aureus is a common pathogen that causes a wide range of infections. The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of S. aureus in the nasal cavity of healthy individuals. A total of 100 individuals were recruited from a community health center. The prevalence of S. aureus was determined by culture and sensitivity testing. The results showed that the prevalence of S. aureus was 45%. The most common antibiotic resistance was to penicillin (80%).
