

THE WILDERNESS

SITUATION

On a vacation in July, you and your family have been travelling through the wilderness of western Maine in a pickup camper. In a blinding rainstorm, you made a wrong turn on the unmarked lumber road. You have wandered more than 150 miles, over a maze of lumber routes, into the wilderness. The truck has run out of gas and now you, your parents, a 10-year-old sister, a 6-year-old brother, are lost.

After a family conference, you decide it is not wise to split up. You are going to try to walk back all together. You are pretty sure that if you pace yourselves, you can probably cover about 15 miles a day. Because of the fuel shortage, there are no helicopters or jeeps patrolling the area and you have seen not other cars or houses.

The family is dressed in light weight summer clothing and wearing sneakers. Temperatures at night go down in the low 40s. It is also bug season. As you look around, you pull the following items out of the camper, some of which may be useful.

TASK

You must CHOOSE and put in priority order, the fifteen most important items for survival in the wilderness. The others can be eliminated.

Outdoor experts have rated these items in order of usefulness. Let's see how your rating compares to theirs!
