A nurse uses evidence-based practice (EBP) to provide nursing care. What is the best rationale for the nurse's behavior?

- a. EBP is a guide for nurses in making clinical decisions.
- b. EBP is based on the latest textbook information.
- c. EBP is easily attained at the bedside.
- d. EBP is always right for all situations. - Answer a. EBP is a guide for nurses in making clinical decisions.

Evidence-based practice (EBP) is a guide for nurses to structure how to make appropriate, timely, and effective clinical decisions. A textbook relies on the scientific literature, which may be outdated by the time the book is published. Unfortunately, much of the best evidence never reaches the bedside. EBP is not to be blindly applied without using good judgment and critical thinking skills.

In caring for patients, what must the nurse remember about evidence-based practice (EBP)?

- a. EBP is the only valid source of knowledge that should be used.
- b. EBP is secondary to traditional or convenient care knowledge.
- c. EBP is dependent on patient values and expectations.
- d. EBP is not shown to provide better patient outcomes. - Answer c. EBP is dependent on patient values and expectations.

Even when the best evidence available is used, application and outcomes will differ based on patient values, preferences, concerns, and/or expectations. Nurses often care for patients on the basis of tradition or convenience. Although these sources have value, it is important to learn to rely more on research evidence than on nonresearch evidence. Evidence-based care improves quality, safety, patient outcomes, and nurse satisfaction while reducing costs.

A nurse wants to change a patient procedure. Which action will the nurse take to easily find research evidence to support this change?

- a. Read all the articles found on the Internet.
- b. Make a general search of the Internet.
- c.
