NASA SP-7500 United States. National Aeronautics and Space Administration, 1977 Scientific and Technical Aerospace Reports, 1991 Lists citations with abstracts for aerospace related reports obtained from world wide sources and announces documents that have recently been entered into the NASA Scientific and Technical Information Database Life Cycle Cost Analysis Handbook Ralph C. Aikman, Rachel M. Schwartz, 1976 Life-cycle Saving, Limits on Contributions to DC Pension Plans, and Lifetime Tax Benefits Jagadeesh Gokhale, Laurence J. Kotlikoff, Mark J. Warshawsky, 2001 This paper addresses three questions related to limits on DC contributions The first is whether statutory limits on tax deductible contributions to defined contribution DC plans are likely to be binding focusing on households in various economic situations The second is how large is the tax benefit from participating in defined contribution plans The third is how does the defined contribution tax benefit depend on the level of lifetime income We find that the statutory limits bind those older middle income households who started their pension savings programs late in life those who plan to retire early single earner households those who are not borrowing constrained and those with rapid rates of real wage growth Most households with high levels of earnings regardless of age or situation are also constrained by the contribution limits Lower or middle income two earner households that can look forward to modest real earnings growth are likely to be borrowing constrained for most of their pre retirement years because of the costs of paying a mortgage and sending children to college These households are not in a position to save the 25 percent of earnings allowed as a contribution to DC plans Some of these middle income households however are constrained by the 10 500 limit on elective employee contributions to 401 k plans if the households have access to only these plans and their employers make no pension contributions for them The borrowing constraints faced by many lower and middle income Americans means that contributions to DC plans must come at the price of lower consumption when young and the benefit of higher consumption when old Indeed for a stylized household earning 50 000 consistently contributing 10 percent of salary to a DC plans that earns a 4 percent real return means consuming almost two times more when old than when young Measured as a share of lifetime consumption the tax benefit from participating in a DC plan can be significant Assuming annual contribution rates at the average of the maximum levels allowed by employers in 401 k plans and assuming a 4 percent real return on DC and non DC assets the benefit is 2 percent for two earner households earning 25 000 per year 3 4 percent for those earning 100 000 per year and 9 8 percent for those earning 300 000 per year The Molecular Biology of the Yeast Saccharomyces, Life Cycle and Inheritance Jeffrey N.
