Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The physical health of the women was measured using a variety of tests, including a 6-minute walk test, a 12-minute walk test, and a 15-minute walk test. The psychological health of the women was measured using a variety of tests, including a Beck Depression Inventory, a Beck Anxiety Inventory, and a State-Trait Anxiety Inventory. The results of the study showed that the women in the walking program had significantly better physical and psychological health than the women in the control group. The walking program had a positive effect on the physical health of the women, as evidenced by their improved performance on the 6-minute walk test, the 12-minute walk test, and the 15-minute walk test. The walking program also had a positive effect on the psychological health of the women, as evidenced by their improved scores on the Beck Depression Inventory, the Beck Anxiety Inventory, and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Abstract Staphylococcus aureus is a leading cause of nosocomial infection. The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of S. aureus in the hospital environment and to identify risk factors for colonization. A total of 100 samples were collected from various hospital environments. The results showed that 60% of the samples were positive for S. aureus. The highest prevalence was found in the intensive care unit (ICU) and the operating room. Risk factors for colonization included contact with medical equipment, contact with healthcare workers, and contact with other patients. The study highlights the importance of infection control measures in the hospital environment.
