Pricing Derivatives Under Lévy Models Andrey Itkin, 2017-02-27 This monograph presents a novel numerical approach to solving partial integro differential equations arising in asset pricing models with jumps which greatly exceeds the efficiency of existing approaches The method based on pseudo differential operators and several original contributions to the theory of finite difference schemes is new as applied to the Lévy processes in finance and is herein presented for the first time in a single volume The results within developed in a series of research papers are collected and arranged together with the necessary background material from L vy processes the modern theory of finite difference schemes the theory of M matrices and EM matrices etc thus forming a self contained work that gives the reader a smooth introduction to the subject For readers with no knowledge of finance a short explanation of the main financial terms and notions used in the book is given in the glossary The latter part of the book demonstrates the efficacy of the method by solving some typical problems encountered in computational finance including structural default models with jumps and local stochastic volatility models with stochastic interest rates and jumps The author also adds extra complexity to the traditional statements of these problems by taking into account jumps in each stochastic component while all jumps are fully correlated and shows how this setting can be efficiently addressed within the framework of the new method Written for non mathematicians this book will appeal to financial engineers and analysts econophysicists and researchers in applied numerical analysis It can also be used as an advance course on modern finite difference methods or computational finance
