During the early 19th century, American literature was in a state of flux. The literary tradition of the time was largely based on the works of English writers, and American writers were often seen as imitators. However, the American literary tradition was also beginning to develop its own unique voice. This was reflected in the works of writers such as Washington Irving, James Fenimore Cooper, and Edgar Allan Poe. These writers were often seen as the first American writers to create a truly American literature.

The American literary tradition was also beginning to reflect the social changes of the time. The American literary tradition was often seen as a reflection of the American spirit, and it was often used to promote the values of the American people.
