Guiding principle	Description
Proportionate	Everything that the organization does needs to be proportionate to the scale, complexity, and risk of the problem.
Holistic	The focus on value principles encompasses many perspectives, including the experience of customers and users.
Iterative and incremental	Do not wait that an approach will achieve something new without considering what is already available. It is incremental. There is likely to be a goal that is the current service, process, program, project, and people that can be used to create the desired outcome.
Evidence-based	The current state should be investigated and observed closely to make sure it is fully understood. Do not attempt to do something at once. Learn from experience, make incremental changes, and iterate. Organizing work into smaller, manageable sections that can be completed and completed in a timely manner. Use data to measure a change focus on each effort.
People-centric	People, partners, and other stakeholders are the focus of all efforts. All efforts should be focused on the people, and experience, and transformation change. Working together across boundaries and roles, and across people, roles, and resources to improve, and increase the effectiveness of long-term results.
Continuous improvement	Continuous improvement requires information, understanding, and trust. Work and collaboration, and the ability to learn, are essential.

Costs introduced

Achieving desired outcomes requires resources (and therefore costs) and is often associated with risk. Service providers help their customers to achieve outcomes and to design, take on, and manage the associated risks and costs. On the other hand, service relationships can introduce risks and costs, and in some cases, can negatively affect some of the intended outcomes after supporting others.

Management

People, partners, and processes	Management and leadership are essential to achieving value. People, partners, and processes, which should all be considered to provide a desired value. If a process, service, or other value is to be provided, it is a process, a process, and a process. Use the maximum number of people necessary to accomplish the objectives. Always use customer feedback to improve and refine processes that deliver results.
Organizational and technical	Processes of all types, particularly risk, should be designed to be low-risk. Continuous working, which is truly successful and use technology to ensure that the risk is reduced. The risk of human error should only support processes that contribute value.
