

Description: Position, velocity, and acceleration of a stone thrown vertically from a cliff. (graphing applet)

Constants | Periodic Table

A stone is thrown upward from the edge of a cliff, reaches its maximum height, and then falls down into the valley below. A motion diagram for this situation is given in the figure, beginning the instant the stone leaves the thrower's hand. Construct or select the corresponding motion graphs, taking the magnitude of the acceleration due to gravity as exactly  $10 \text{ m/s}^2$ . Ignore air resistance. In all three motion graphs, the unit of time is in seconds and the unit of displacement is in meters. In plotting the points, round-off the coordinate values to the nearest integer.

Part A

Select the graph corresponding to the stone's vertical displacement,  $y(t)$ . The upward direction on each graph is the region above the horizontal axis.
