

Answer Key for Study Guide for H.G. Wells' The Invisible Man

Discussion Questions:

1. The story begins with Griffin taking rooms at The Coach and Horses. Why do you think Wells begins the story here, and not with the experiment that rendered Griffin invisible?

The mystery is greater when the reader "meets" Griffin but does not know how he became invisible. Since the title of the book tells us that there is an invisible man at the center of the story, there is no suspense attached to the revelation of Griffin's condition. The mystery lies in wondering how this came about. In addition, HG Wells was less interested in exploring HOW a man might become invisible (perhaps Jules Verne would have wanted to dig into that challenge deeply) as he was in exploring the RESULTS of such an experiment.

2. We are often invited to identify with the main character of a novel. Does Wells invite us to identify with Griffin?

No. By keeping him mysterious, it is difficult for us to identify initially. As we learn more about him, most of what we learn is very unpleasant. Again, this does not encourage identification on the part of the reader.

3. Or sympathize with him?

No. His character seems so selfish, so arrogant, so angry and violent that he is not a sympathetic character.

4. Do you like Griffin? Why, or why not?

Answers will vary; I suppose! Hopefully most people don't actually LIKE Griffin! :-)

5. The early part of the story has many comic details, but these disappear as it progresses. Do you think this was intentional on Wells' part? If so, why might he have organized it in this way? If not, do you find this change troubling as the reader?

Answers will vary. Some readers believe that this change is intentional and adds to the darkening quality of the story as Griffin's dark character and history are revealed. Others feel that it was poor planning on Wells' part, and that it is distracting for the reader as the tone inexplicably changes.
