

Jarvis: Physical Examination and Health Assessment, 8th Edition

Chapter 01: Evidence-Based Assessment

Answer Keys: Study Guide and Lab Manual

1. Individual answers may vary. Use the answers provided as a guideline.

Stage	Example
Cue recognition	A. J., a 62-year-old male, appears pale, diaphoretic, and anxious.
Hypothesis formulation	A. J. states that he feels a terrible "tightness" and pain in his chest. The pain started while he was shoveling snow. At this point, you formulate a hypothesis of angina pectoris.
Data gathering for hypothesis testing	During the history and physical examination, you gather hypothesis testing data to support or reject the tentative hypothesis: you take vital signs, measure the $PO_2$ by pulse oximetry, listen to breath sounds and heart sounds, assess the characteristics of the chest pain, and order a STAT ECG.
Hypothesis evaluation	You synthesize the new data collected, which support the hypothesis of angina pectoris, which has now subsided with two doses of sublingual nitroglycerin. The final diagnosis is activity-induced angina pectoris.

2. To identify assumptions, recognize that you could take information for granted, or see it as fact when, in reality, there is no evidence for it. In this situation, the speaker is assuming that Ellen must break up with her boyfriend due to rough treatment. To get facts in this situation, one needs to find out more information about how Ellen's boyfriend has acted toward her and what they have done to resolve this situation, if anything. A joint counseling session could accomplish this. In the meantime, it would be prudent for Ellen to seek safe shelter if indeed her boyfriend is abusing her. A more appropriate response is: "Please tell me more about your relationship with your boyfriend."
3. Findings from case study include the following:
- For Mr. Quinn, ask him to step on the scale again so that you can validate that the weight was measured accurately.
  - For Ellen, validate the counselor's statements with Ellen. Using an open-ended approach, say, "Ellen, it can be upsetting to be admitted to residential treatment. How are you feeling about this?"
  - When auscultating a heart sound that you may not be sure about, ask an experienced colleague to listen to it as well and compare assessments.
