

Industrial Revolution

The Industrial Revolution was a period of major industrialization and innovation that began in Britain in the late 18th century and spread to other parts of the world by the mid-19th century. It was characterized by the transition from hand production methods to machine production, the development of factories, and the growth of the working class.

The Industrial Revolution is divided into three main periods:

- 1750-1840: The First Industrial Revolution
 - Characterized by the use of water power and the invention of the steam engine.
 - Key inventions include the spinning jenny, the water frame, and the power loom.
 - Major industries were textiles, iron, and coal.
- 1840-1870: The Second Industrial Revolution
 - Characterized by the use of steam power and the invention of the internal combustion engine.
 - Key inventions include the Bessemer process, the telephone, and the electric light bulb.
 - Major industries were steel, oil, and electricity.
- 1870-1900: The Third Industrial Revolution
 - Characterized by the use of electricity and the invention of the internal combustion engine.
 - Key inventions include the automobile, the airplane, and the radio.
 - Major industries were automobiles, aviation, and communication.

The Industrial Revolution had a profound impact on the world, leading to the growth of the middle class, the development of modern cities, and the creation of a global economy. It also led to the exploitation of workers and the environmental degradation of the planet.
