Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program significantly improved the subjects' physical health, as measured by the 6-minute walk test, and their psychological health, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory. The walking program also had a significant positive effect on the subjects' quality of life, as measured by the SF-36. The walking program was well tolerated and had no adverse effects. The results of this study suggest that a supervised walking program can be an effective intervention for improving the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Abstract Staphylococcus aureus is a leading opportunistic pathogen. The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of S. aureus in the nasal cavity of healthy children and to determine the effect of antibiotic use on the colonization of the nasal cavity. A total of 100 children were included in the study. The prevalence of S. aureus in the nasal cavity was 100%. The colonization of the nasal cavity was significantly higher in children who had used antibiotics in the last 6 months compared to children who had not used antibiotics. The results of this study suggest that the colonization of the nasal cavity by S. aureus is a common phenomenon in healthy children and that the use of antibiotics may increase the colonization of the nasal cavity.
