Examining Enron United States. Congress. Senate. Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation. Subcommittee on Consumer Affairs, Foreign Commerce, and Tourism, 2005 Argentina, Economic Memorandum: Statistical appendix World Bank, 1985 This report examines the difficult economic situation facing Argentine policymakers at the end of 1983 as a new government assumed power The country's experience with stabilization and economic liberalization is reviewed distinguishing between the 1976-78 period when rapid devaluations a reduction of the fiscal deficit and the easing of price and financial controls helped stimulate exports and growth and the period after October 1978 when inconsistencies between exchange rate import liberalization wage and fiscal policies produced a deep recession high levels of inflation and a serious balance of payments and external debt crisis Despite present difficulties the report concludes that the Argentine economy possesses important elements of long term strength which with sustained economic recovery and sound domestic policies should permit a resumption of growth at the same time that the burden of external debt is gradually reduced The report recommends a number of medium term measures to improve fiscal management including better tax administration providing adequate export incentive to both agriculture and industry and raising the efficiency of the financial system in mobilizing and allocating domestic savings Daily Graphic Henry Ofori, 1969-05-14 Flight 93 National Memorial, General Management Plan , 2007 Liability Insurance Availability United States. Dominican Republic , 1985 The Dominican Republic is confronting the worst economic crisis in its recent history This memorandum examines its long term prospects its public finances pricing policy in food crops and the incentive structure facing importers and exporters It concludes that unless major policy initiatives are taken growth in the second half of the 1980s will not resume the high rates experienced in the early 1970s The foreign trade regime should be reformed to eliminate imbalances in trade to make import substitution more efficient and promote new exports Disincentives facing exporters should be reduced to encourage exports New taxes and improvement in the performance of public enterprises are necessary to reduce fiscal deficits the public investment program constrained by the lack of public savings should concentrate on high return projects already underway The country's natural endowments favoring food production could be exploited more fully if government price distortions were eliminated

Brazil, Medium-term Policy Analysis Kenneth Meyers, F. Desmond McCarthy, 1985 This paper develops an analytical framework to examine the Brazilian economy A macro economic projection model is developed based on a consistency framework for 1980 After 1980 the economy began to show many serious weaknesses unemployment rose rapidly the current account deteriorated the external debt rose to over US 90 billion by 1983 The projections suggest that even relatively strong growth rates of around 6% per annum although large enough to support the absorption of increases in the labor force will not be sufficient to reduce the pool of unemployed that has accumulated during the recession The recent performance in the merchandise balance of Brazil has been quite strong but it is essential to maintain this highly favourable balance if the current account the debt servicing required is to remain within acceptable limits This implies that import expansion should be strongly conditioned by a favourable export performance The multi sectoral nature of the model provides considerable insight into analyzing which sectors may be most appropriate for various initiatives where one may expect unfavourable consequences The paper indicates which policy instruments may be appropriate for various goals but the choice blend will in the end be a political decision

Macroeconomic Policy Alternatives in the Dominican Republic F. Desmond McCarthy, 1984 Dominican Republic is an open economy with a relatively small domestic market Towards the end of the 1970s a number of external shocks in oil prices terms of trade and higher interest rates presented major problems This resulted in a surfacing of weakness in policy making and institutional structure that had not been apparent previously The debt situation steadily deteriorated as the government borrowed heavily for balance of payments support in 1981 and 1982 leading to the current near crisis situation The analysis in this paper suggests that under any reasonably likely external scenario Dominican Republic will be unable to achieve an acceptable per capita economic growth without major policy shifts Policy alternatives include i a move towards a unified exchange rate ii fiscal and institutional changes and iii a major shift in factor pricing together with a rethinking of investment strategy These policy initiatives should lay the base for a more buoyant and versatile economy over the medium to long term This paper develops an analytical framework to examine these various policy alternatives

Argentina ,1985 This report examines the difficult economic situation facing Argentine policymakers at the end of 1983 as a new government assumed power The country s experience with stabilization and economic liberalization is reviewed distinguishing between the 1976 78 period when rapid devaluations a reduction of the fiscal deficit and the easing of price and financial controls helped stimulate exports and growth and the period after October 1978 when inconsistencies between exchange rate import liberalization wage and fiscal policies produced a deep recession high levels of inflation and a serious balance of payments and external debt crisis Despite present difficulties the report concludes that the Argentine economy possesses important elements of long term strength which with sustained economic recovery and sound domestic policies should permit a resumption of growth at the same time that the burden of external debt is gradually reduced The report recommends a number of medium term measures to improve fiscal management including better tax administration providing adequate export incentive to both agriculture and industry and raising the efficiency of the financial system in mobilizing and allocating domestic savings

Morocco Bela Balassa, World Bank, 1984 The manufacturing sector plays an important role in the Moroccan economy Spurred by the growth of domestic demand and heightened protection of the domestic market industrial production expanded rapidly during the 1960s The import substitution strategy was stepped up but despite a sharp rise in investment in 1972-77 there was only a temporary surge in the growth rate of the industrial sector with respect to the previous period and since 1978 manufacturing output has stagnated. The economic and financial projections in this report indicate that the current account deficit of the balance of payments will remain at around US 2 billion during 1983-85 if an export promotion policy is not put into effect. This report proposes a revision of industrial policy aiming at improving the system of incentives for production, improving the system of taxation and promotion of industrial investment and providing for the financing of investment. Implementation of these measures would bring about a better allocation of resources and a reduction in the balance of payments deficit. Pakistan, Review of the Sixth Five-year Plan, 1984
